It was this precaution which cost them their lives. She unwittingly locked them in to their death, for had the door been left open the neighbors at the first alarm might have rescued them.

No one, however, knew at 8.80 o'clock this morning, when fingers of smoke began to creep out from under the doors of the Berberick apartments, that any human being was in the rooms.

An attempt was made, however, to force an entrance, but the door was strong, and, moreover, it was securely locked, and it withstood the half-heart-

Had they known there were lives to save in that burning room there would have been no question of their success. Some one who saw from the front of the house the smoke curling up against forcing its way out through the crevices ran and turned in a hurried alarm.

In a very few minutes the fire-engines making this port responded. The firemen ran up the stairs with the pierhead.

responded. The firemen ran up the stairs and it took but a blow or two from their heavy axes to beat down the wooden barrier.

They rushed in with the hose and turned it on a corner of the room where there was a fierce crackling biaze. It was not much of a fire for them to fight, and they had it under control in a very few minutes.

Meanwhile Mrs. Berberick returned and learning that the fire was in her rooms, ran wildly through the halls, shouting in German that her children were inside.

Policeman Edward Bowes, of the East Sixty-seventh street station, and a fireman dashed through the stifling smoke into the little bedroom. There they groped about and found both little fellows in bed in their undershirts, tightly casped in each other's arms, but it the eleep of death.

The apartments of a Bohemian baker, whose family was away, across the hall, were unlocked, the dead little fellows laid on the floor of the little parlor, side by side, as livey had died, and tenderly covered with a blanket by a big policeman, who remained on guard awaiting the coming of a Coroner and the father. Meanwhile two canaries in the room caroled merrily in strange incongruity with the presence of death.

Mrs. Herbericke, who had become hysterical with grier, was cared for by friends, while her husband was sent for. When he arrived his grief was pitiful. But he sobly exonerated his wife from a lil blame, and as he looked, through blinding tears, at the dead bables, all his earld was:

"She had to go to the butcher's."
